A taste of the Latin American agroecological revolution

Public Event:

Date: Tuesday, September 2, 2014.
Time: 7pm
Place: Media Theater (UC Santa Cruz)
Directions: Enter campus through the West Gate entrance off of Empire Grade Rd. and follow signs for the Media Theater
Parking: Visit the attendant on duty to purchase a parking permit.

The expansion of agroecology in Latin America has initiated an interesting process of cognitive, technological and socio-political innovation, intimately linked to the new political scenarios such as the emergence of progressive governments and resistance movements of peasants and indigenous people. Thus the new agroecological scientific and technological paradigm is being built in constant reciprocity with social movements and political processes.

The Latin American Scientific Society of Agroecology (SOCLA) in collaboration with The Center for Agroecology and Sustainable Food Systems announces a public event to interact with leading agroecologists from Brasil, Chile, Cuba, Ecuador, Mexico, Nicaragua and Peru. Our visitors will update us on the agroecological technical and policy advances in various countries and the challenges to achieve food sovereignty in the midst of a globalized economy, corporate control of the food system and climate change.

An invitation from: SOCLA
Co-sponsor: CASFS