

Multicultural Scholars Agroecology & Food Justice Scholarship

What is the scholarship?

The Multicultural Scholars Agroecology & Food Justice Scholarship supports undergraduates to pursue interests in agroecology, sustainable food systems, and food justice, to develop their knowledge and skills, to complete degrees, and to prepare for jobs in the fields of agroecology and food systems. The Scholarship seeks to build a more inclusive and equitable food system and academic community in agroecology. Recipients of the scholarship will be students who are interested in pursuing a B.A. in Environmental Studies with a Concentration in Agroecology & Sustainable Food Systems (or closely related field of study), and will:

- take classes related to agroecology and food systems
- enroll in internships at the UCSC farm and/or with local organizations
- participate in workshops to enhance leadership skills
- Engage with community partners in an Alternative Spring Break in Watsonville
- Receive funding for a summer research or internship experience

How will I benefit?

Scholars will benefit financially, and will receive guidance for their university experience. Benefits include:

- $6500 scholarship each year for 2 (incoming transfer students) or 4 years (incoming frosh)
- $4000 towards an 8-week summer experience (such as an internship with a local non-profit or in a research lab)
- funding for text books and supplies
- quarterly check-ins on academic progress with UCSC faculty
- gaining leadership and job skills
- building connections with community partners
